

Enjoying the fruits of some hard labour..

Snowy Mountains Produce at Numeralla is looking at another successful tilt at the Sydney Royal Fine Foods competition in 2017, following the 2016 harvest of their Frantoio variety olives.

This year the Ultra Premium Extra Virgin Olive Oil placed second in the competition. Next year producer George Aoun, intends to win.

The indications are good. This year's harvest netted 1100 litres of oil, despite nearly six tonne not being picked because it was impacted by frost.

The 2015 crop yielded 270 litres. The tests George and his son Nick have carried out on the oil are more than encouraging – according to Nick, the 2016 'vintage' is far superior to the 2015 and even more likely to take out the top prize.

The flavour of the two vintages is certainly distinctively different and both have a definite 'wow' factor.

The freshness and flavour of the oil has to be experienced to be properly appreciated.

Snowy Mountains Produce olives were picked during May, crushed, bottled and labelled onsite at Numeralla.

Nick is keen for the operation to remain 'boutique', which is easily manageable by the family without it growing too big and too busy.

With the olives sorted for this harvest, the family is now looking forward to the next busy time – when the cherries are due for harvest in a few month's time.

The olives are crushed to extract the oil, which is then stored until bottling can be completed.
